With hope in efficiency, the wealth of Australia is constituted by a maze of contracts and a showbag full of citizenship rights.

The Australian nation is woven together from many utility, cost and production functions, frontiers, curves and vectors. Our huge local area network has supported decision-making regarding our wealth and shaped the judgements of its users.

It has not been easy, and there have been technical corrections from time to time, but we reckon that in future our trials will balance, and our sheets too.

In every generation, exogenous variables have produced wealth-enhancing main effects.

Australians are free to be proud, proud to be free, free to be as individual as each other, and free to pursue their hopes and ideals of freedom (although, let's face it, there are always constraints necessitating resource allocation decisions, best made with the assistance of experts). We value excellence, truth, fair presentation, relevance and reliability, the appearance at least of independence, and long hours - with Friday night set aside for courtship.

Australia's system of government exists under law to interfere in interface with the optimisation processes of all Australians, but it will never truly infringe on our prejudice, fashion or ideology, as little can be done to halt the achievement of tax minimisation.

In this spirit, we stumble down the street chewing gum.